ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

The Public Health and Midwifery World Conference 2025 will promote advancements in midwifery and public health practices aimed at improving healthcare services for women, families, and communities. This event offers three days of comprehensive discussions on diverse topics related to midwifery, reproductive health, maternal and neonatal care, women's health policies, public health strategies, and more.

The theme, "Innovating Care, Empowering Communities: Shaping the Future of Midwifery and Public Health," reflects the dynamic changes shaping these critical areas of healthcare.

Participants can engage with new insights, research findings, and innovative healthcare practices that can be directly applied in professional settings. The event will take place in Boston, Massachusetts, USA, from September 7 to 9, 2025, and will empower attendees to implement cutting-edge knowledge to improve healthcare outcomes.

Program Objectives of the Public Health and Midwifery World Conference (PHMWC) 2025:

- Explore the role of midwives and public health professionals in improving women's healthcare, emphasizing inclusion, mental health, and equality.
- Provide real-world examples of how midwifery and public health research are successfully translated into practice.
- Discuss challenges and innovations in maternal and neonatal care, public health interventions, and policy development.
- Foster partnerships between healthcare organizations, educational institutions, and research centers to strengthen the global healthcare community.

WHO CAN ATTEND?

Midwives, public health professionals, nurses, healthcare administrators, obstetricians, gynecologists, maternal and neonatal care specialists, reproductive health experts, policymakers, mental health professionals, community health workers, nutritionists, social workers, epidemiologists, child healthcare specialists, researchers, students, and NGO representatives.

WHY ATTEND?

Join a global community of professionals committed to advancing knowledge and improving midwifery, maternal health, and public health practices. This premier event offers a unique platform to network with fellow professionals, researchers, educators, and policymakers, share cutting-edge research, and gain insights into the latest healthcare strategies for women and children.

During the conference, you'll participate in dynamic presentations, workshops, and discussions covering various topics, from reproductive health and maternal care to community healthcare practices and public health innovations. You'll also have the chance to engage with world-renowned speakers and thought leaders in the field, providing a unique opportunity to shape the future of healthcare for women and families.
